THE HOME GARDEN

"Value of the home garden is not as fully appreciated or as highly developed as it might easily be," says Prof. L. M. Montgomery of the College of Agriculture at Columbus. He says further that "the real work of the garden depends upon the variety and constancy of its products. The average farm garden produces a great quantity of certain vegetables for short periods, but does not produce a succession of crops throughout the season."

"We should plan our garden so that the family may be supplied with peas over a period of two months instead of the two weeks or less which is the more common period. Lettuce, beets, carrots and many other crops should be obtainable in the most tender and edible form throughout the season instead of for short periods in early spring."

"There are two methods of securing the desired succession of crops, first by selecting varieties, which planted at the same time, will mature their products at different dates. Second, by making successive planting of one or two varieties of the same kind of crop throughout the early spring and summer or in some cases until early fall."

"Many vegetable crops mature very quickly and in order that the ground may be occupied and the weeds more easily controlled the space should be followed by lettuce, beans, winter beets, carrots, beans, late cabbage, or celery; and early beets or carrots may again be planted to some other short season crop. For example, early lettuce and radishes may be followed by radish or spinach."

"By constant planning the garden valuable half acre on any farm."

It is not necessary to use cruelty in "breaking up" sitters. If broody hens are properly treated they will begin to lay again in a short time after being removed from the nests; but if they are "tarred, bruised or abused is more than likely they will not lay until the yhave full yrecovered from the ill-treatment and acquired their accustomed tranquility.
